Hestia Interior Design:
RETHINKING THE POSSIBILITIES

Creating a beautiful home is only part of good interior design. The real value lies in making sure it works beautifully too — not just when it's finished, but for the way you live every day.

For Dundalk-based Hestia Interior Design, that thinking is at the heart of every project.

Founded by design duo Rachel O'Hanrahan and Sarah Kerley, Hestia is an established multidisciplinary interior design studio working with residential and commercial clients across Ireland. Together, Rachel and Sarah bring more than 30 years of combined experience, with backgrounds spanning textiles, visual merchandising, retail and interior design.

Today, Hestia specialises in helping busy professionals and families who are building, renovating or furnishing their homes and want an experienced design team to take the lead.

For these clients, the challenge is rarely a lack of ideas. It's finding the time to make hundreds of interconnected decisions — and knowing which decisions need to be made, in what order and before it becomes expensive to change them.

That is where Hestia's approach goes beyond aesthetics.

From spatial planning and kitchen and joinery design to lighting, electrical layouts, materials, finishes, furniture and the final details, every element is considered as part of the overall home. The aim is to create interiors that feel cohesive and considered while functioning effortlessly around the people who live there.

Good design also starts much earlier than many homeowners realise.

Decisions made before and during construction can have a lasting impact on how a home functions. Layout, plumbing positions, lighting, electrical requirements, storage and bespoke joinery all need to work together. Bringing an interior designer into the process early allows these details to be considered as part of one overall vision rather than addressed individually as the build progresses.

For Hestia, part of the designer's role is anticipating the things a client may not yet know they need to think about.

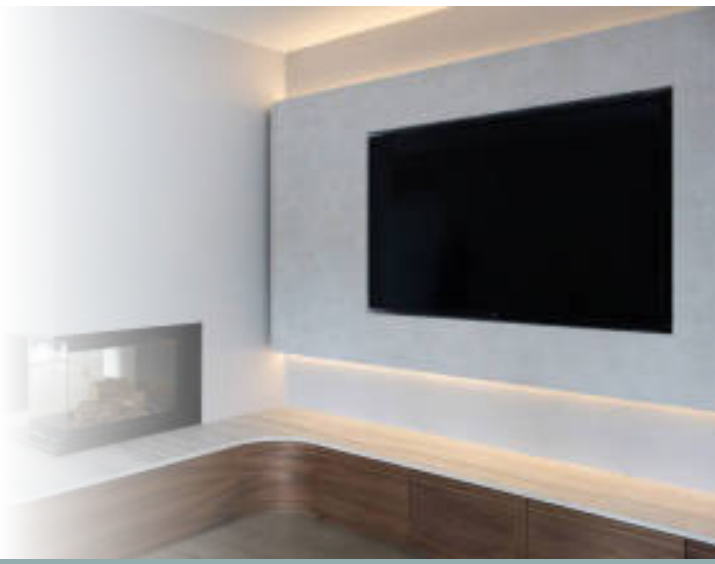

It means asking the right questions, identifying potential problems before they reach site and providing clear professional direction throughout the process. For time-poor clients in particular, having someone overseeing the design decisions can remove much of the uncertainty and overwhelm that comes with a major home project.

Hestia brings the same considered approach to its commercial work, designing offices, hospitality, salons, gyms and retail environments around both function and brand identity. Their backgrounds in visual merchandising add another layer of expertise, particularly when considering layouts, customer journeys and how a space is experienced.

While every Hestia project is different, the process always begins in the same place: understanding the client.

Every new project starts with a Design Strategy Consultation. This initial consultation gives Rachel and Sarah the opportunity to understand the property, lifestyle, priorities, budget, aesthetic and overall scope of the project, while giving the client expert design direction from the outset.

From there, Hestia can develop a clear path forward and determine the level of design support required.

The result is not simply a beautiful interior. It's a home that has been thoughtfully planned around the people living in it — functional, cohesive and designed to stand the test of time.

For clients balancing demanding careers, family life and a significant home project, Hestia offers something equally valuable: the confidence of knowing the details are being considered and the process is being professionally led.

Rethinking the possibilities isn't simply about imagining what a space could look like. It's about understanding what it could do for the people who live there.

STUDIO GALLAGHER ARCHITECTS

DESIGNING CONTEMPORARY HOMES WITH A SENSE OF PLACE

In the rugged landscapes of County Donegal, where dramatic coastlines meet rolling hills and changing Atlantic skies, architecture has a unique responsibility—to complement rather than compete with its surroundings. That philosophy is at the heart of Studio Gallagher Architects, the Letterkenny-based practice led by founder and principal architect Patrick Gallagher.

Patrick has delivered exceptional high-end residential projects across Ireland, the United Kingdom, Lagos (Nigeria), Brazil, and Switzerland, creating homes defined by thoughtful design, craftsmanship, and a deep understanding of place. Returning to Donegal, he brought with him a wealth of international experience that continues to shape the practice's distinctive architectural approach, combining global design expertise with an enduring connection to the dramatic landscapes of the Wild Atlantic Way.

"The best architecture doesn't dominate the landscape—it belongs to it."

Having studied Architecture in Scotland, London, and Australia, Patrick's diverse education and international experience inform a design philosophy that is both contemporary and timeless. Every project is approached with a commitment to exceptional quality, refined detailing, and architecture that responds beautifully to its setting and the people who inhabit it.

Specialising in bespoke contemporary homes, the studio has earned a reputation for creating elegant, site-responsive architecture that balances modern living with the character of the Irish landscape.

From its base in CoLab, Letterkenny, Studio Gallagher Architects approaches every commission as an opportunity to tell a different story. No two sites are alike, and neither are the homes that emerge from the practice. Each project is shaped by its landscape, orientation, views and the lifestyle of the client, resulting in buildings that feel deeply personal while remaining timeless in design.

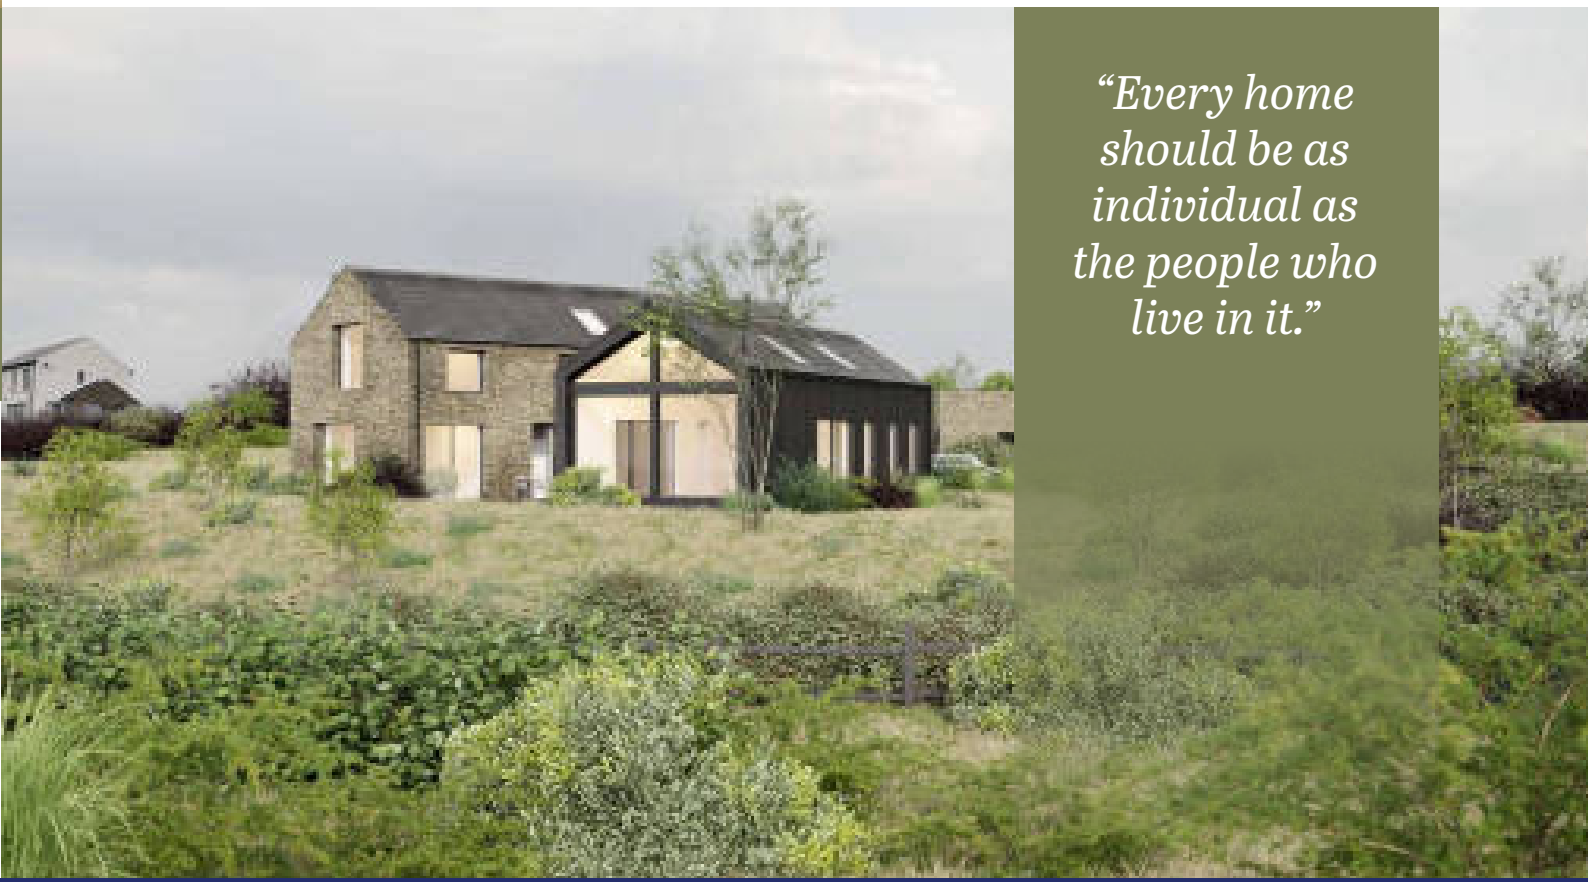

Patrick Gallagher has developed a design ethos centred on simplicity, craftsmanship and sustainability. Clean lines, generous glazing and carefully chosen natural materials define many of the practice's projects, allowing interiors to embrace natural light while framing Donegal's spectacular scenery. Rather than following trends, Studio Gallagher Architects focuses on enduring design principles that ensure homes remain functional and beautiful for generations.

The practice is particularly recognised for its expertise in one-off contemporary homes. These bespoke residences demonstrate an appreciation for both architectural innovation and practical family living. Open-plan layouts, energy-efficient design and seamless indoor-outdoor connections are recurring themes, reflecting the changing expectations of modern homeowners while responding to Ireland's climate and environment.

What distinguishes Studio Gallagher Architects is its collaborative approach. Clients are involved throughout the design journey—from the first sketch to planning, technical detailing and project delivery. This partnership ensures every home reflects not only architectural excellence but also the aspirations and personalities of those who will inhabit it.

Beyond aesthetics, sustainability plays a central role in the studio's work. Thoughtful site planning, passive solar principles and energy-conscious construction methods contribute to homes that are environmentally responsible without compromising on comfort or style. The result is architecture that is equally suited to contemporary living and the evolving demands of a low-carbon future.

As Donegal continues to inspire architects from across Ireland, Studio Gallagher Architects remains firmly rooted in the county that shaped its vision. Under Patrick Gallagher's leadership,

"Every home should be as individual as the people who live in it."

Project: New build contemporary house

Project Name: Teach Fada

Area: 275 m^2

Location: Co. Donegal | Ireland

Architect: Studio Gallagher Architects

Client: Private

Completion date: March 2020

Project Description

Nestled within the rugged Wild Atlantic Way, sits Teach Fada, a contemporary new build house overlooking Lough Swilly in Co. Donegal. The client required a contemporary, open plan, well insulated house with consideration for the sea views. The form and orientation of the house were developed in response to the coastal conditions of the site. This resulted in the design of a building that carefully sits within the landscape.

The massing of the house is broken into two blocks, 'living' and 'sleeping'. These blocks comprise of a single room depth in plan with mono-pitch roofs. A corridor links the living area with the bedroom block. Full height windows are carefully positioned at opposite ends of the corridor to enhance the feeling of space and light as well capturing views of the landscape.

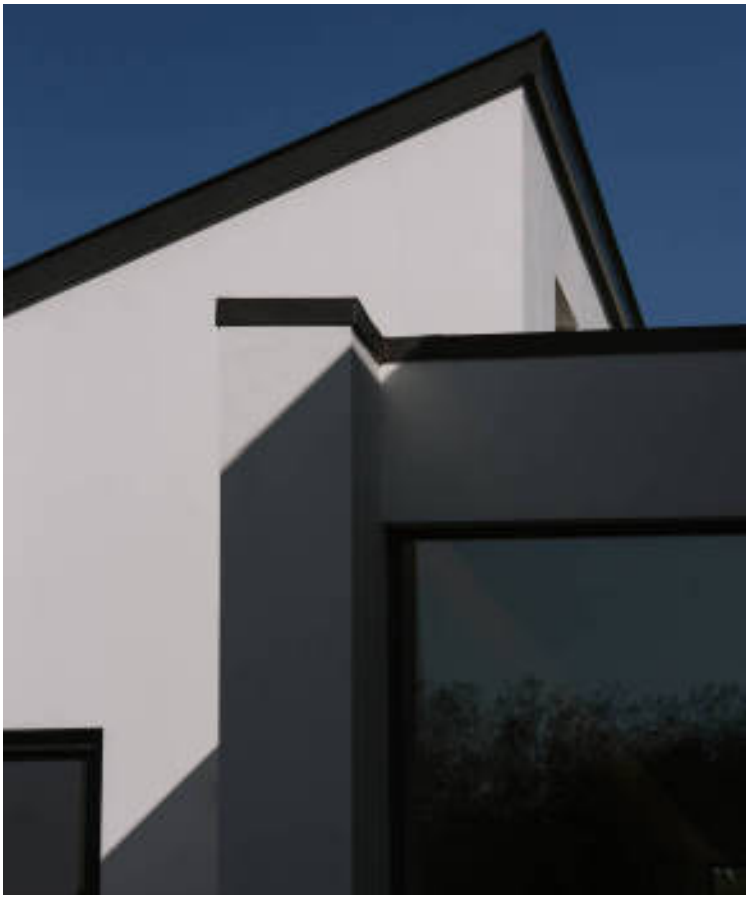

The design is enhanced by the use of high-quality materials, both externally and internally. The external envelope is heavily insulated, with a high degree of airtightness. It also has a ground source heat pump with underfloor heating and a mechanical heat recovery ventilation system. This contributes towards a low energy, sustainable house.

From the outside, the house appears as a modest building. Internally, the spatial arrangement consists of free-flowing spaces that open, close and expand to meet the needs of the client and her family. On opening the front door, attention is immediately captured by the sea view. Once inside the double height living space, the view is fully revealed by a large 6m wide full height window.

The living area consists of an open plan living, dining and kitchen with a second sitting area that can combine or close-off to become a snug, which benefits from the evening sunset. The kitchen is served by a discretely hidden pantry and preparation area that forms as a recessed pod between both areas. A separate utility room that serves as laundry is positioned away from the many living area.

Timber flooring is used throughout to accentuate the horizontally of the spaces on one level. The bathroom spaces maintain a sense of calmness by the use of a restrained material palette, supported by concealed ambient lighting and built-in furniture. The master suite extends beyond the living block to take advantage of the sea views. The ensuite is positioned to the rear of the bedroom so that the view remains uninterrupted.

The completed building represents a contemporary new build that sits comfortably within its surroundings.

Project: New build contemporary house

Project Name: Tirloughan House

Area: 265 m^2

Location: Co. Donegal | Ireland

Completion date: March 2021

Tirloughan House

Tirloughan House is a contemporary rural dwelling composed of two simple, sculptural volumes that respond sensitively to both the landscape and the client's lifestyle. The restrained architectural language is defined by clean geometric forms, minimal detailing and a muted material palette, allowing the building to sit quietly within its Donegal setting.

The composition separates the living and sleeping accommodation into two distinct linear blocks connected by a sheltered entrance courtyard. This arrangement reduces the perceived scale of the dwelling while creating a series of protected external spaces that are sheltered from prevailing Atlantic winds.

Finished in a seamless smooth render with dark aluminium windows and understated detailing, the building expresses a calm, monolithic character. Carefully positioned vertical openings punctuate the façades, framing views of the surrounding countryside while balancing daylight, privacy and solar orientation. The deep window reveals emphasise the solidity of the building envelope and reinforce the minimalist aesthetic.

The contrasting roof forms— the mono-pitch roofs appear as an exploded traditional pitched roof with a crisp ridge detail create a subtle dialogue between vernacular, agricultural buildings and contemporary architecture. The dark timber-clad link between the two forms provides warmth and texture, defining the entrance sequence and strengthening the visual separation of the two masses.

Approached via a simple gravel forecourt, the dwelling presents a restrained and understated presence from the road, with its scale carefully broken down through the articulation of individual volumes. The result is a timeless contemporary home that balances bold architectural expression with sensitivity to its rural context, creating a dwelling that is both elegant and enduring.

Interior

The interior is conceived as a calm, light-filled living environment where space, proportion and natural light define the architectural experience. A restrained material palette of polished concrete floors, crisp white walls and natural timber introduces warmth and simplicity, allowing the surrounding landscape to become the focal point of the home.

At the heart of the dwelling, the open-plan kitchen, dining and living space is organised beneath a dramatic vaulted ceiling that enhances the sense of volume while drawing the eye towards expansive glazing overlooking the Donegal countryside. Full-height sliding doors dissolve the boundary between inside and out, flooding the interior with daylight and extending the living spaces onto the surrounding landscape.

The carefully considered arrangement of openings creates a constantly changing quality of light throughout the day. High-level windows introduce daylight deep into the plan while maintaining privacy, while the large glazed elevations capture panoramic views and maximise passive solar gain.

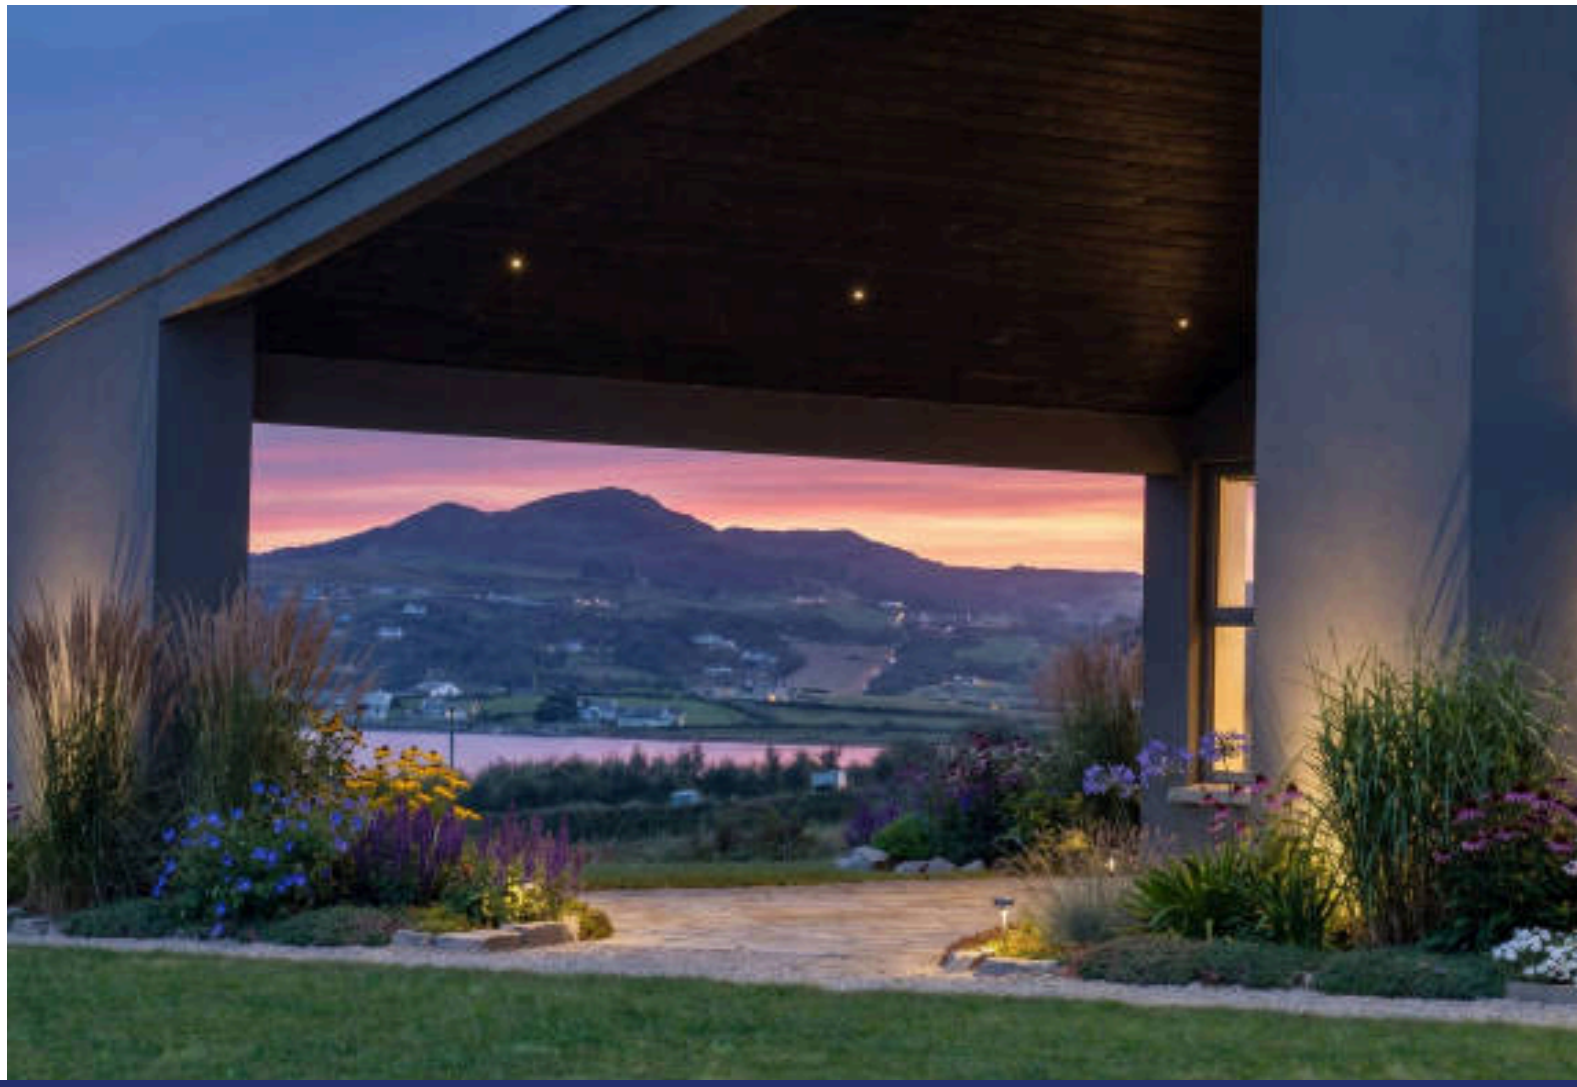

The interior architecture embraces a minimalist aesthetic, where clean lines, concealed detailing and a neutral palette create a timeless backdrop for everyday living. Bespoke joinery and integrated storage maintain visual simplicity, ensuring the open-plan spaces remain uncluttered and functional.

The generous ceiling height enhances the feeling of openness, while the subtle transitions between living, dining and kitchen areas encourage both social interaction and quiet retreat. Carefully framed views connect each space to the surrounding gardens and distant landscape, reinforcing a strong relationship between architecture and place.

The result is a contemporary interior that balances simplicity with warmth, combining refined detailing, abundant natural light and a seamless connection to the outdoors to create an elegant yet highly liveable family home.

You bought the house. Now comes the exciting part: making it feel like home

FROM FIRST HOME TO YOUR HOME

Curated interior design, made accessible

There is something uniquely exciting about buying your first home.

After months or even years of saving, searching, viewing and imagining, you finally have the keys in your hand. The decisions that once existed only on property listings and floor plans suddenly become yours to make. Where will the sofa go? What colour will you paint the walls? Which room will become your retreat at the end of the day?

But once the excitement of getting the keys begins to settle, another part of the journey begins.

Turning a house into your home.

For many first-time buyers, this can feel surprisingly difficult. The purchasing process understandably focuses on the big decisions: flooring, kitchens, bathrooms, sofas, dining tables and paint colours.

But once those decisions are made, the home can still feel strangely impersonal. It can be difficult to pinpoint exactly what it needs.

The missing components are often harder to define: the details that make a house a home - comforting textiles, layered textures and finishes, colours that complement your paint choices, artwork that brings everything together, and design pieces and scents that give the space atmosphere and personality.

LuxeBox Atelier is an Irish-owned luxury home decor and design brand created for those who want to create a beautiful home but could use a little help bringing it all together.

LuxeBox Atelier considers all the details for you. We will help you create a space that feels warm, cohesive, personal and reflective of you.

You may know exactly what you like but struggle to recreate it in your own home. You may have browsed hundreds of interiors, collected beautiful individual pieces or carefully chosen your furniture, yet still feel that something is missing.

Perhaps the room looks finished but doesn't quite feel finished.

You bought the house. Now comes the exciting part: making it feel like home

Curated interior design, made accessible

LuxeBox Atelier was created around a simple idea: beautiful interiors don't have to feel inaccessible or overwhelming.

Rather than sourcing dozens of individual pieces, LuxeBox brings together art, textiles, decorative and sculptural objects in thoughtfully curated collections.

Each collection is designed around an aesthetic, colour palette and mood, creating relationships between the pieces so that they work together within a space.

Because no two homeowners are at exactly the same stage of their journey, LuxeBox offers different levels of curation, from effortless ready-to-style collections to completely bespoke interior experiences.

When you know the look you love

Perhaps you've just moved in and you're starting with a blank canvas. Or you've already furnished the room and are looking for those final details that will make it feel complete. Our pre-curated collections are designed for those moments.

You want to create a cozy sanctuary at home, and don't know where to begin. You want your living spaces to look fully designed and leave a lasting impression, yet look effortless.

Each pre-curated LuxeBox is built around a distinctive aesthetic and mood, bringing together complementary pieces that can immediately introduce colour, texture, artwork, warmth and personality into a space.

You don't need to know exactly which cushion works with which artwork, or how to balance sculptural objects with softer textures. We've already considered those relationships for you. Simply choose the collection that speaks to you and introduce it into your home.

The pieces can be styled together as a complete story or incorporated individually alongside the things you already own. Timeless by design, our boxes are curated with items chosen for their enduring appeal, to effortlessly blend with existing and future collections, to sit beautifully alongside one another.

When you have a vision

For others, the starting point is more personal.

You may already have a colour scheme in mind. Perhaps you've created a mood board, saved photographs of interiors you love or know how you want your new living room to feel: calm, coastal, warm, sophisticated or full of character.

You may even have furniture you absolutely love or a central art piece you want to build around. This is where our bespoke curation service comes in.

Instead of choosing from an existing collection, you can share your vision with us. Your room. Your existing pieces. Your colour palette. Your inspiration. Your mood board. We use these as the foundation for a bespoke collection designed specifically around your space.

The result is a more personal interpretation of your style: a considered selection of pieces chosen to complement what you already have and help create the atmosphere you want to achieve.

It is the space between shopping and interior design: you bring the vision, and we help bring it to life.

When you want to leave the design to us

Then there are those who know what they love but don't necessarily want to make all the decisions themselves. For them, LuxeBox offers something a little different: the element of surprise.

Tell us about yourself. The colours you're drawn to. The interiors you admire. The places that inspire you. The materials, shapes and styles you love and perhaps the things you would never choose. Then leave the creative direction to us.

Your preferences become our brief and we create a completely bespoke collection designed to reflect your personality and the feeling you want your home to have.

You don't select every individual piece. You discover them during the unwrapping experience and enjoy seeing how your personal aesthetic has been interpreted through a collection of carefully chosen pieces.

Your Canvas, Our Curation.

From buyer to homeowner

At LuxeBox Atelier, we believe interior design should not be reserved for those with large budgets, extensive knowledge or the confidence to make every design decision themselves.

Sometimes you simply need a starting point. Sometimes you need someone to help bring your ideas together. And sometimes you want to hand over the creative process entirely and discover what someone else sees in your vision.

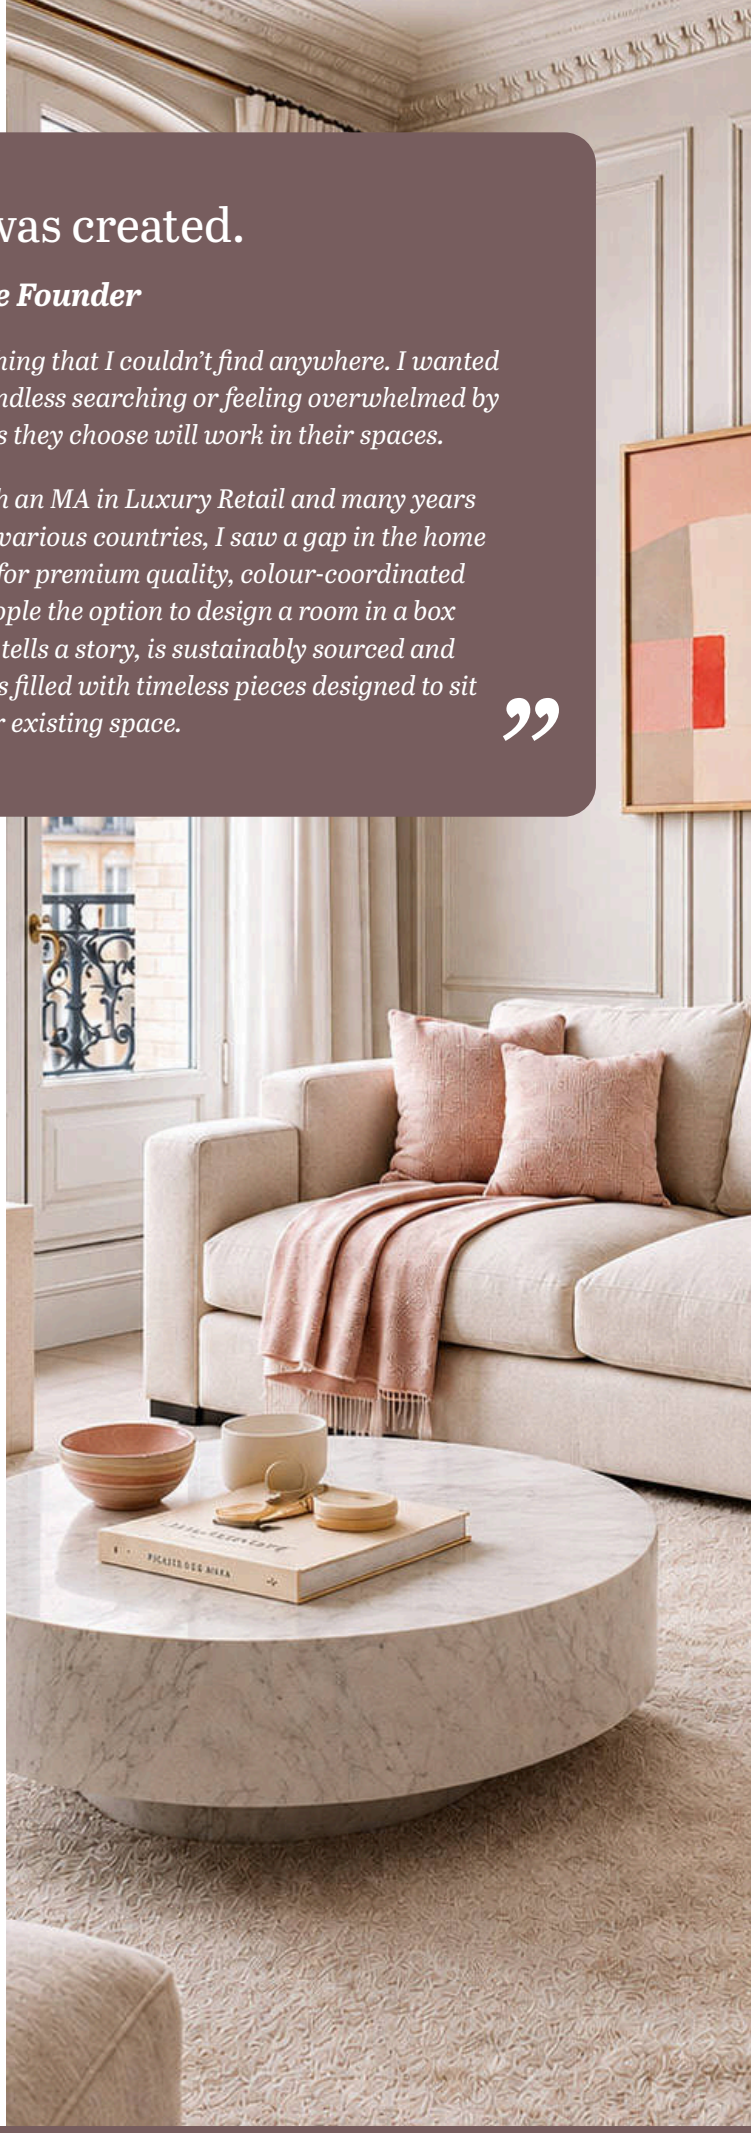

There is a LuxeBox for wherever you are in your journey.

Why LuxeBox was created.

From Helen, the Founder

"I created LuxeBox Atelier because I wanted something that I couldn't find anywhere. I wanted to help people create their dream homes without endless searching or feeling overwhelmed by choice so they can feel confident that the items they choose will work in their spaces.

Years ago, as an experienced Fashion Stylist with an MA in Luxury Retail and many years of set production experience in Film & TV across various countries, I saw a gap in the home decor and styling market. There was no option for premium quality, colour-coordinated ready-to-place collections. I wanted to give people the option to design a room in a box without compromising on quality. Every piece tells a story, is sustainably sourced and many are carved or finished by hand. Each box is filled with timeless pieces designed to sit effortlessly within your existing space."

Our Design Philosophy.

Every piece is selected through a lens of:

Timeless design over seasonal relevance

Craftsmanship over mass efficiency

Material integrity over visual excess

Curation over accumulation

Ritual over routine

All our curations are made in small batches, sustainably produced and hand packaged using only eco-friendly materials. We do this to remain true to our values and add to the uniqueness of each box.

A home that feels like you

Your home should reflect your life, your memories, your personality and the things you love.

The most rewarding moment of buying your first home isn't necessarily the moment you receive the keys. It's the moment you walk through the door, look around and realise this isn't just the house I bought.

It feels like mine now. This is home.

CREATING HOMES WITH HEART, CHARACTER AND PURPOSE

A beautiful home is about far more than how it looks. It is about how it feels, how it functions and, ultimately, how well it reflects the people who live there. For Dublin-based interior designer Nichola Hunter, that philosophy sits at the heart of her work, creating elegant, welcoming interiors that feel personal rather than prescribed.

Nichola Hunter Interiors is a boutique design studio specialising in high-end residential projects across Dublin, Leinster and beyond. With a background in kitchen design, Nichola brings a particularly practical understanding to her interiors, combining careful spatial planning with a sophisticated eye for materials, colour, texture and detail. Her expertise in bespoke cabinetry and joinery design enables her to create beautifully integrated spaces where every element is considered, from the overall layout to the fines detailing.

Her approach begins not with a predetermined style, but with listening. Understanding how clients live, what they value and what they want their home to say is central to the design process. The result is an interior that feels considered and cohesive, while retaining a sense of individuality. Rather than imposing a signature look, Nichola believes every home should tell the story of the people who live there, balancing timeless elegance with practical everyday living.

That balance between beauty and function is perhaps one of the studio's defining characteristics. Nichola's kitchen-design background taught her that good design must work in real life, not simply look impressive in photographs. Storage, proportions, lighting and flow are given as much consideration as the decorative details.

The studio offers a full-service design experience, taking projects from the initial consultation and concept development through spatial planning, sourcing, lighting design, contractor coordination, installation and final styling. The studio also specialises in bespoke cabinetry for kitchens, media walls, home offices wardrobes and living spaces, creating tailored solutions that combine craftsmanship with everyday functionality. For homeowners who need a more focused intervention, there are also interior consultations and room-by-room design packages.

This flexible approach means the studio can work on everything from a single-room transformation to a complete home refurbishment. Projects often involve close collaboration with architects, builders, cabinet makers and specialist craftspeople, ensuring each design is carried through from concept to completion with attention to every detail. Recent projects span Dublin, Kildare and the wider Leinster region, reflecting the studio's experience across period properties, contemporary homes and largescale residential refurbishments demon strating the breadth of the studio's residential portfolio.

For Nichola, timelessness is more important than simply following the latest fashion. Trends may influence the details, but the foundations of a successful interior should have longevity. Natural materials, tactile finishes, thoughtful lighting and carefully selected furniture can create depth without making a room feel dated. Her interiors are characterised by layered textures, understated luxury and carefully curated palettes that create calm, inviting spaces designed to evolve gracefully over time.

Lighting, in particular, is an important part of her design vocabulary. In Ireland, where natural light can shift dramatically throughout the day and across the seasons, layered lighting can transform the atmosphere of a room. Nichola advocates combining ambient, task and accent lighting to create warmth, flexibility and depth.

There is also an increasing appreciation for craftsmanship and individuality in her work. Bespoke joinery, artisan-made furniture and sculptural lighting are selected not simply for their appearance, but for the character and longevity they bring to a home. These carefully considered details help create interiors that feel layered, personal and unique rather than mass produced.

Ultimately, Nichola Hunter Interiors is about creating homes rather than showcases. By combining practical expertise with an instinctive understanding of colour, texture and atmosphere, Nichola creates spaces designed to be lived in — elegant, personal and enduring. Her collaborative approach, meticulous attention to detail and commitment to timeless design ensure that each project feels uniquely personal while enhancing the way her clients live every day.

In an industry where trends can come and go overnight, that commitment to individuality may be the most timeless design choice of all.

NEATLY-BRINGING CALM BACK TO IRISH HOMES

In today's fast-paced world, our homes should be places of comfort, calm and sanctuary. Yet for many families, busy schedules, growing households and the accumulation of everyday belongings can quickly turn living spaces into sources of stress. That's where Neatly.ie is making a remarkable difference.

Founded by professional home organiser Ann Teehan, Neatly.ie has become one of Ireland's leading home decluttering and organisation services, helping clients nationwide transform chaotic spaces into functional, peaceful homes. As a mother of four herself, Ann understands the pressures of modern family life and the challenges of maintaining an organised home while balancing work, children and everyday responsibilities. This personal experience lies at the heart of Neatly's compassionate, practical approach.

Unlike a traditional cleaning service, Neatly focuses on creating lasting organisational systems rather than temporary tidiness. Every project begins by understanding how a family lives, identifying what is no longer serving them and creating tailored storage solutions that make daily routines simpler and more efficient. From overflowing wardrobes and cluttered kitchens to children's playrooms and entire homes, Neatly helps clients reclaim both their space and their peace of mind.

The benefits extend far beyond neatly folded clothes and organised cupboards. Research consistently shows that clutter can contribute to feelings of stress and overwhelm, while organised spaces encourage productivity, relaxation and improved wellbeing. Neatly's philosophy is simple: when your home works for you, life becomes easier.

Clients frequently describe the experience as transformative. Many speak of feeling lighter, calmer and more in control after working with Ann, praising not only her expertise but also her supportive and non-judgemental approach. Rather than encouraging perfection, Neatly empowers homeowners to create realistic systems that can be maintained long after the organising session has ended.

Neatly's growing reputation has also attracted wider recognition. Ann has shared her expertise through media features and has become a respected voice in Ireland's growing home organisation movement, offering practical advice that encourages people to declutter before investing in storage solutions. Her message is clear: organisation isn't about buying more containers—it begins by owning less and making thoughtful use of the space you already have.

With consultations available across Ireland, Neatly continues to help homeowners simplify their lives one room at a time. Whether preparing for a house move, welcoming a new baby, downsizing or simply seeking a fresh start, the company provides practical guidance with empathy and professionalism.

In a world where life often feels increasingly busy, Neatly.ie reminds us that an organised home is more than just aesthetically pleasing—it is an investment in wellbeing, clarity and everyday happiness.

Is clutter driving you mad? I can help!

Illuminating Ireland with Timeless European Elegance

In an age of mass production and fast interiors, true craftsmanship has become a rare luxury. Nestled in Dublin, Ruebasse Lights has quietly built a reputation as one of Ireland's most distinctive lighting specialists, offering an extraordinary collection of vintage European lighting alongside bespoke contemporary pieces that blur the line between functional design and art.

Owned by Robert Scott, Ruebasse Lights is more than a lighting company—it is a celebration of heritage, creativity and enduring craftsmanship. Every fixture tells a story, whether it began its life in a Parisian townhouse, a French château or in the skilled hands of artisans working within the company's Dublin workshop.

France has long been recognised as the spiritual home of decorative lighting, producing some of Europe's finest chandeliers, sconces and handcrafted metalwork. It is here that Ruebasse Lights sources much of its remarkable vintage collection. Each piece is carefully selected for its authenticity, quality and character before being sympathetically restored, preserving the charm and craftsmanship that modern manufacturing often struggles to replicate.

Walking through the Ruebasse collection is like travelling through Europe's rich design history. Elegant Art Deco pendants sit comfortably alongside ornate Louis XV chandeliers, while industrial workshop lights and mid-century designs offer a more understated sophistication. Every fitting carries the patina of time, making each installation completely unique.

Yet Ruebasse Lights is not solely about preserving the past. The company has successfully blended tradition with innovation by designing and handcrafting contemporary lighting in its Dublin workshop. These bespoke creations combine timeless materials with modern aesthetics, allowing architects, interior designers and homeowners to commission one-of-a-kind pieces tailored to their individual spaces.

This balance between vintage authenticity and contemporary craftsmanship has become the hallmark of the business. Rather than following passing trends, Ruebasse Lights focuses on creating lighting that will remain beautiful and relevant for decades to come.

At the centre of the company is owner Robert Scott, whose passion for European design has shaped the business from the beginning. His appreciation for exceptional craftsmanship and eye for distinctive design have established Ruebasse Lights as a trusted destination for those seeking something beyond the ordinary.

Robert believes lighting should never be an afterthought. It has the power to transform architecture, create atmosphere and define the personality of a room. Whether illuminating a Georgian townhouse, a modern penthouse, a boutique hotel or a contemporary restaurant, the right light becomes the focal point that brings every interior to life.

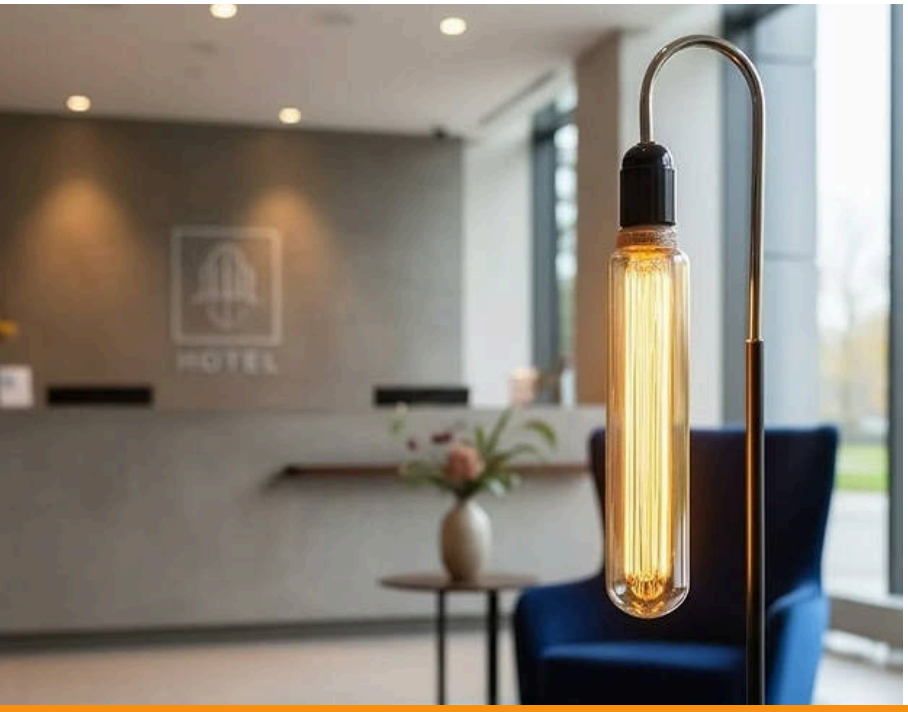

Increasingly, homeowners and designers are moving away from disposable décor in favour of investment pieces with provenance and longevity. This shift towards sustainability has only strengthened the appeal of carefully restored vintage lighting, where exceptional craftsmanship is given a second life rather than replaced.

For Ruebasse Lights, sustainability is as much about preserving artistry as it is about reducing waste. Restoring original European fittings while producing handcrafted contemporary designs ensures every piece possesses both integrity and permanence.

In an industry often dominated by uniformity, Ruebasse Lights continues to stand apart through its dedication to quality, authenticity and timeless design. Under Robert's direction, the Dublin company has become a destination for those who understand that exceptional lighting does far more than illuminate a room—it creates atmosphere, evokes emotion and leaves a lasting impression.

ELECTRICAL SERVICES
POWERING YOUR FUTURE

POWERING THE NEXT CHAPTER: THE STORY OF FLOOD ELECTRICAL

Behind every modern home, thriving business and well-connected workplace lies an electrical system that has to be safe, reliable and ready for the future. For Flood Electrical, that is where experience makes the difference.

Based in North Co Dublin and serving customers throughout Leinster, Flood Electrical is a newly established electrical contracting business built on almost two decades of industry experience. The company was founded by Joe Flood, whose career began with an apprenticeship and has since encompassed domestic, commercial and industrial electrical work across Ireland. His recent move into business ownership marks a new chapter in a career spanning close to 20 years.

What distinguishes Flood Electrical is the breadth of expertise behind its offering. Rather than focusing solely on traditional electrical installations, the company provides a comprehensive range of services designed around the changing needs of homeowners and businesses.

For domestic customers, this includes electrical installations and upgrades, consumer-unit replacements, fault finding and repairs, smart lighting and spotlight installations, as well as electrical work associated with extensions and renovations.

EV charger installation is another key service, reflecting the growing demand for electric vehicles and the infrastructure required to support them.

On the commercial side, Flood Electrical works on office fit-outs and maintenance, data cabling and network installations, fire alarm systems and emergency lighting. The company also provides periodic inspections and PAT testing, helping businesses maintain safe and functional electrical environments.

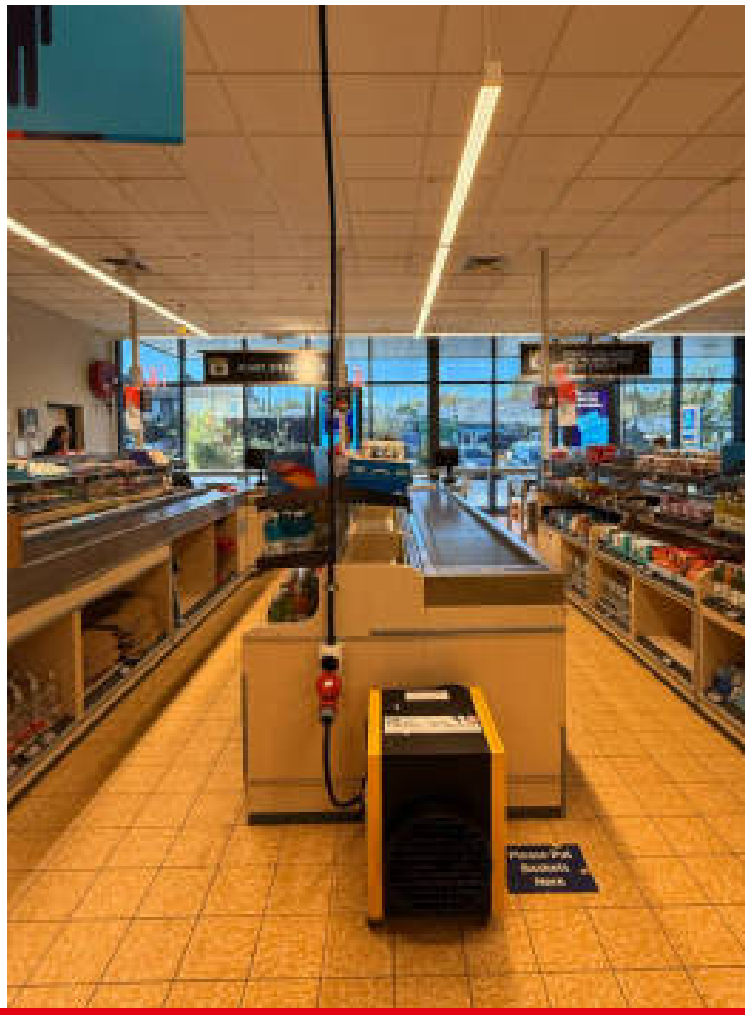

That combination of technical knowledge and practical project experience is particularly valuable in a sector where every job can bring different challenges. Joe Flood's background includes the management of projects, customer relations and complex electrical and data installations, experience that provides a strong foundation for a business where communication and attention to detail are as important as technical ability.

Flood Electrical is also emerging at an interesting moment for Ireland's electrical industry.

Homes are becoming more connected, businesses increasingly depend on resilient digital infrastructure, and technologies such as EV charging are moving rapidly into the mainstream. For electricians, the role is consequently evolving from simply installing power and lighting to helping customers create systems suited to a more electrified and connected future.

Yet the company's proposition remains refreshingly straightforward: reliability, hard work and pride in every job. That personal approach is central to a business that is deliberately building its reputation through relationships as much as through technical expertise.

Eagle Garden Services: Creating Outdoor Spaces Made for Living

Contact Bardi on 083 4014131 for a Free Estimate.

There is a growing appreciation for outdoor living in Dublin. Gardens are no longer simply spaces to maintain; they are becoming extensions of the home — places to relax, entertain, dine, work and enjoy throughout the year. Helping homeowners make the most of that valuable outdoor space is Eagle Garden Services, a Dublin-based outdoor specialist offering a wide range of landscaping and garden development solutions.

From carefully planned landscaping to stylish decking, pergolas and bespoke log cabins, Eagle Garden Services takes an approach that combines practicality with contemporary outdoor design. The aim is simple: to transform ordinary gardens into attractive, functional spaces that homeowners can genuinely enjoy.

Landscaping remains at the heart of any successful garden transformation. A well-designed outdoor space can completely change the character of a property, introducing structure, defined areas and a sense of purpose. Whether the vision is a low-maintenance modern garden, a family-friendly outdoor area or somewhere designed primarily for entertaining, thoughtful planning and quality workmanship can make all the difference.

For those looking to create a dedicated outdoor living area, decking can provide the perfect foundation. A well-positioned deck creates a natural transition between the house and garden, offering an ideal setting for outdoor furniture, dining and relaxing. Add a pergola and the space takes on another dimension, providing architectural interest while creating a more defined and inviting area for enjoying the garden.

Perhaps one of the most exciting trends in modern gardens, however, is the rise of the garden room and log cabin. What was once considered an occasional garden feature has evolved into a highly practical addition to the home. A well-designed log cabin can provide a peaceful home office, hobby room, relaxation space, gym or simply a retreat away from the main house. For Dublin homeowners looking to gain additional usable space without extending their property, it can be an attractive option.

What sets an outdoor specialist apart is the ability to look at the garden as a complete environment rather than a collection of individual projects. Landscaping, decking, pergolas and garden buildings can work together to create a cohesive outdoor setting, with each element contributing to the overall design.

Eagle Garden Services is part of a growing outdoor-services sector serving Dublin and the surrounding areas, where homeowners are increasingly investing in their gardens and seeking professional solutions for transforming them. Business listings identify Eagle Garden Services as operating in the garden and landscaping sector, while its wider service offering places it firmly in the outdoor-living market.

Ultimately, a great garden is about more than appearance. It is about creating somewhere people want to spend time. With its focus on landscaping, pergolas, decking, log cabins and much more, Eagle Garden Services is helping Dublin homeowners turn underused outdoor areas into spaces designed for modern living.

Snooze Mattress: Cork's Homegrown Sleep Revolution

In a world where quality sleep has become one of life's most valuable luxuries, Cork-based Snooze Mattress & Wellness is proving that choosing the right mattress is about far more than comfort—it's about improving health, wellbeing and everyday life.

Located on the Kinsale Road in Cork, Snooze has quickly established itself as one of Ireland's most distinctive sleep retailers. Rather than simply selling mattresses, the company has built its reputation around helping customers discover the ideal sleep solution through expert advice, innovative technology and a genuinely personalised shopping experience. Their philosophy is refreshingly simple: the right mattress should be matched to the individual, not chosen at random.

At the heart of the business is Dream Mapping, an in-store consultation designed to analyse how customers sleep, identify pressure points and recommend mattresses that best suit their body, sleeping style and budget. It transforms what can often be an overwhelming purchase into a confident, informed decision.

Snooze stocks an impressive collection of premium brands, including Tempur, Kamjo, King Koil and Odearest, alongside its own exclusive ranges. Customers are encouraged to spend time comparing products side by side, with knowledgeable sleep experts available to guide rather than pressure them. It is an approach that reflects a growing consumer demand for expertise, transparency and value rather than traditional hard-selling.

As an Irish-owned business, Snooze combines international-quality products with local customer care. The company offers nationwide delivery, price guarantees, manufacturer warranties and comfort trials on selected mattresses, giving customers added confidence in what is often a long-term investment.

The Cork showroom itself has become a destination for people looking to improve their sleep health. Spacious, welcoming and designed to encourage customers to test products properly, it reflects the company's belief that buying a mattress should never be rushed. From memory foam and hybrid mattresses to adjustable beds, pillows and sleep accessories, every product has been selected with quality and performance in mind.

Perhaps what sets Snooze apart most is its understanding that sleep is increasingly recognised as a cornerstone of physical and mental wellbeing. Better sleep contributes to improved concentration, recovery, mood and overall health, making the right mattress an investment in quality of life rather than simply another piece of furniture.

With its combination of expert guidance, innovative sleep assessment, premium brands and genuine Cork hospitality, Snooze Mattress & Wellness is redefining how Irish consumers shop for better sleep. In an industry often focused solely on products, Snooze has placed people at the centre of the experience—and for thousands of satisfied customers, that has made all the difference.

Ultimately, Ger Flynn Bespoke Interiors represents more than furniture—it represents a philosophy of creating homes that are uniquely personal. Every cabinet, wardrobe, and handcrafted detail reflects a passion for excellence and a belief that outstanding design should enrich everyday living.

For those seeking interiors that combine beauty, functionality, and enduring craftsmanship, Ger Flynn Bespoke Interiors continues to set the benchmark for bespoke design, proving that when furniture is made with care, precision, and passion, it becomes an investment not only in a home, but in the quality of life within it.

IHM GROUP
HOME MAINTENANCE

REIMAGINING THE IRISH HOME, ONE RENOVATION AT A TIME.

"IHM also places project management firmly at the centre of its service. Rather than leaving homeowners to coordinate different trades, the company says its team manages the renovation process from demolition and installation through to finishing and quality checks"

For homeowners, renovation is about far more than fresh paint, new tiles or a contemporary kitchen. It is about making a home work better, feel better and reflect the people who live in it. That philosophy sits at the heart of IHM Group, a Drogheda-based renovation and property services company serving homeowners across Louth, Meath and Dublin.

With more than 20 years of industry experience, IHM Group has built its reputation around a straightforward idea: take the stress out of renovation while delivering quality workmanship and attentive customer service. The company provides complete home and apartment renovations, from individual rooms to full interior overhauls, managing projects from the initial consultation through to completion.

Its portfolio of services covers some of the most important spaces in the modern Irish home. Kitchens can be redesigned around smarter layouts, contemporary finishes and improved storage, while bedrooms can be transformed into more comfortable, personalised retreats. Bathrooms are another speciality, with IHM offering everything from sleek contemporary designs and luxurious spaces to practical wet rooms, en-suites and accessible bathrooms.

One of the most appealing aspects of the IHM approach is the emphasis on visualisation before work begins. Following consultation and a site survey, the team can create detailed 3D designs, allowing homeowners to see how their proposed space could look and make informed decisions before construction starts. It is a practical way of turning an idea into something tangible — and of reducing the uncertainty that can accompany a major renovation.

IHM also places project management firmly at the centre of its service. Rather than leaving homeowners to coordinate different trades, the company says its team manages the renovation process from demolition and installation through to finishing and quality checks. Its tradespeople are described as experienced, qualified, certified and registered, reflecting the company's focus on professionalism and accountability.

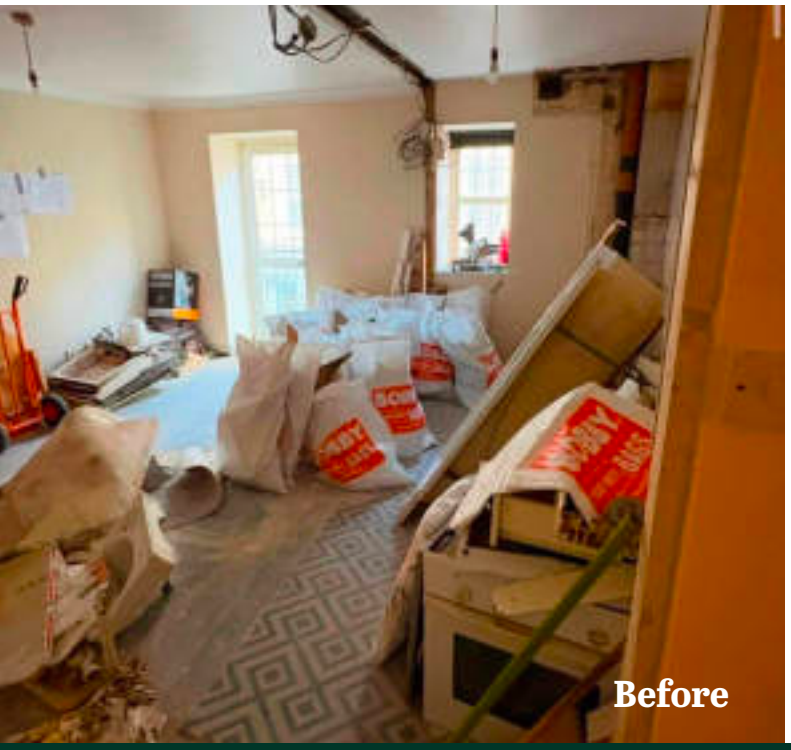

That customer-first philosophy is rooted in the company's origins. IHM says it was established after its founders saw too many homeowners experience poor communication, unfinished snagging and disappointing service elsewhere. Its stated ambition was to create a renovation business where quality and customer satisfaction came first.

For homeowners considering a renovation, that combination of design, craftsmanship and project management offers a compelling proposition: one experienced team overseeing the journey from first conversation to finished room.

In a market where renovating a home can feel daunting, IHM Group is positioning itself as the partner that makes transformation feel less like a building project — and more like the beginning of a better home.IHM will also organise ordering your Skip and full Waste removal Services.

Andrew's
GARDEN FURNITURE

WHERE CRAFTSMANSHIP MEETS OUTDOOR LIVING

In a world of mass-produced furniture and flat-pack solutions, there is something reassuring about a business that still believes in the value of timber, craftsmanship and making something properly. From its base in Portlaoise, Co. Laois, Andrews Garden Furniture has built its reputation around exactly that approach — creating practical, distinctive wooden products designed to become part of everyday family life.

For founder Andrew, carpentry was not necessarily the career he initially imagined. He had wanted to become a mechanic, but his father encouraged him to study carpentry. What began as a course soon developed into a genuine passion, eventually becoming both his trade and his business. Today, that hands-on knowledge is at the heart of Andrews Garden Furniture.

The company's range reflects the versatility of timber. Garden sheds, pergolas, fencing and playhouses are among the products keeping the workshop busy, while bespoke wooden furniture and garden structures allow customers to commission something tailored to their particular needs. Its online catalogue also features towers, swings, slides and other play equipment, demonstrating how the business has expanded beyond traditional garden storage.

Perhaps the most distinctive feature of Andrews Garden Furniture is its willingness to work beyond a standard catalogue. A garden shed can be designed around the available space; a playhouse can become a much-loved adventure zone; while a pergola or garden structure can transform an otherwise underused corner into an outdoor living area.

That bespoke philosophy is complemented by a full delivery and installation service. The company operates from Clonminam Road in Portlaoise and delivers nationwide, with delivery and installation incorporated into its offering on many projects.

There is also a strong sense of pride in passing on traditional skills. Andrew has spoken about working alongside colleagues and teaching the craft to younger members of his team — an important reminder that a small woodworking business can play a role in keeping practical skills alive for the next generation.

The company's ambitions extend beyond simply maintaining the status quo. Andrew has previously spoken of wanting to move to larger premises and broaden the product range, suggesting that growth will come without losing sight of the hands-on approach that helped establish the business. At a time when homeowners are increasingly looking at their gardens as extensions of the home, the appeal of a well-made timber structure is easy to understand. Andrews Garden Furniture offers something more lasting than a seasonal purchase: the chance to create an outdoor space with character, purpose and a distinctly personal touch.

From a Portlaoise workshop to customers nationwide, its story is one of traditional carpentry meeting modern outdoor living — one piece of timber at a time.

Ener Journey has positioned itself as one of those partners, offering strategic expertise that enables organisations to reduce costs, improve performance and embrace a cleaner energy future.

More than simply an energy consultancy, Ener Journey believes that every organisation's path to sustainability is unique. This personalised approach has become a defining feature of the company's growing reputation.

Operating in a rapidly evolving energy landscape, Ener Journey helps businesses identify opportunities to improve efficiency, lower carbon emissions and maximise the value of renewable technologies. By working alongside stakeholders throughout every stage of a project, Ener Journey ensures that solutions are carefully planned, effectively delivered and capable of adapting as business requirements evolve.

In today's marketplace, sustainability is no longer viewed solely as an environmental responsibility—it has become a competitive advantage. Organisations that improve energy efficiency and reduce their carbon footprint are often rewarded through lower operating costs, stronger environmental credentials and increased resilience against future energy market volatility. Ener Journey helps clients unlock these benefits while supporting wider national and international climate objectives.

Looking ahead, the company sees enormous opportunities as Ireland continues investing in renewable energy and decarbonisation. Businesses across every sector are facing increasing pressure to reduce emissions while maintaining productivity and profitability. With its blend of technical expertise, strategic thinking and client-focused service, Ener Journey is helping organisations confidently navigate this transition.

For Ener Journey, sustainability is more than a destination—it is an ongoing process of innovation, collaboration and continuous improvement. By empowering businesses to make smarter energy decisions today, the company is helping build a more resilient, efficient and sustainable tomorrow for Ireland's economy and the communities it serves.

Snag List Steve Property Inspection Services

Why a Professional Snag List and Pre-Purchase Property Inspection Could Be the Best Investment You Make

Buying a home is one of the biggest financial commitments most people will ever make. Whether it's a brand-new build or a second-hand property, it's easy to be taken in by the glossy brochure with pictures that make you feel like your house will be just like this. These brochures are produced by professional designers that are selling to you the dream home you desire. Be aware .... that dream home could turn into a potential nightmare due to the house not having been constructed properly. All brochures say our houses are so and so rated, built to highest standards etc. etc. Have you seen some of the social media posts on the internet lately? It would nearly turn you away from buying a new build property. With the high demand for houses and builders wanting to build and sell as quickly as possible to satisfy that demand then sometimes items get overlooked, Plasterers are rushing because the builders keep saying get a move on we have 10 more houses ready for plastering. The painter is under pressure with the foreman saying "come on we need the house this week, that's fine... leave it as it is.. go into number 25" and so it goes on.

That's why you need a professional snag list inspector to look after your interests. But why should I need you to look at the house for me? I hear you ask. If I'm buying a brand new car I don't have to pay for a mechanic to look it over before paying out my hard earned money surely the same should apply for a newly built house? That's where you are wrong. They are two different industries.. There is more labour involved in constructing a house and it is being built by people who are only interested in one thing. Getting the job done quickly a spossible and collect my money ... end of story!

Why do mistakes happen? Well for instance I have come across the following issue twice in the one week and on two different sites. Under the kitchen sink, inside the base unit is where the stopcock is normally positioned to turn off the main water supply into the house. From here the rest of the house is serviced with water. So the groundworkers / plumbers fit the pipes into the floor, the floor is then concreted and the house gets built. The kitchen is fitted but the kitchen fitters sometimes do not cut out an access hole in the rear of the unit so the house holder can turn off the mains water should there be an issue with the water in the house.

You may have been told that if there is a leak in the house the 1st thing you should do is go quickly into the kitchen, open the sink unit door and turn off the mains water. However, when you open the door there is no sign of anything resembling a stopcock because it is behind the rear wall of the unit and the kitchen fitter forgot or was in too much of a hurry to go home and saying to himself "sure someone else will cut that out the hole anyway!" Even if they do cut out a hole it is sometimes in the wrong position which means you cannot get your hand inside to reach the stopcock and also I have come across holes that have been perfectly cut out but the stopcock has been positioned behind some other pipes and it is impossible to reach the stopcock. You couldn't make it up!

Another item I come across on the odd occasion is in the bathrooms. A good looking toilet bowl is one that completely encloses the pipes at the rear of the bowl so all you see is the nice looking ceramic bowl. I came across a toilet that had the water pipe feeding the cistern on the outside of the bowl... I mean what plumber thought it was a good idea to leave the pipe on the outside? The picture below is what I was met with when I entered the bathroom!

Another item that I could safely say applies to 99.5% of all houses I have looked at is the underside of the window boards. They have plaster snots left on the underside of the board and have not been painted. I once came across a window board that had a timber wedge fitted on the right hand side to level up the board.... While there is nothing wrong with this, the carpenter went away and left the wedge in position. The plasterer came along and plastered around it and then the painter followed on a few weeks later and painted over it! That is how much the people on the building site 'care' about your house. It's the "not my job" mentality.

Years ago the foreman on the site was the head honcho. What he said was gospel. He was a fella that would pick up on items that were not done properly and he told the lads to get it done properly or go home! He was out on site 5 days of the week making his rounds 2 or 3 times a day to check the work is being carried out correctly and the site is moving along nicely. These days he is stuck in the office filling in all types of forms and paperwork for maybe 3 or 4 days of the week and not getting out onto the site to see the problems before they are covered over.

Some foremen are not worth even paying them. I pointed out an issue with a plaster expansion bead. This is a bead that is fitted onto the outside of the house with a flexible gap incorporated in the bead – The idea is that the gap in the plastic bead allows the wall to expand slightly and so preventing possible cracking of the plaster. So imagine this scenario... The plasterer is told to plaster the outside of number 15. He asks what position do you want the expansion beads fitted? He then fits the beads where told and continues to plaster the wall and plasters over the gap but he does not clean out the gap when he is finished. The gap in the bead is full of hard plaster which prevents the bead from expanding and contracting which defeats the purpose of the bead. I explained this to the foreman and he stares back at me with a blank expression.... I don't think he even knew what I was talking about

This is where professional snag lists and pre-purchase property inspections play an important role. They are not about finding fault for the sake of it; they are about giving buyers the confidence that they know exactly what they are purchasing.

What is a Snag List?

A snag list is a detailed inspection of a newly built property to identify defects, poor workmanship and items that do not meet the expected standard of finish. These can range from cosmetic issues such as paint defects and damaged doors etc to more significant issues involving plumbing, insulation, ventilation or structural items.

While many people assume that a brand-new home will be perfect, the reality is that modern construction projects involve dozens of tradespeople working under tight deadlines. Even the best builders can unintentionally leave behind defects that require attention.

A professional snag list provides homeowners with a comprehensive report that can be presented to the builder, allowing issues to be corrected before the buyer completes on the purchase of the property.

What is a Pre-Purchase Property Inspection?

Unlike a snag inspection, a pre-purchase inspection is carried out on an existing property before contracts are finalised.

Its purpose is to identify defects, maintenance issues and potential future costs that may not have been obvious to the client when they viewed the property.

An inspection can reveal concerns such as:

- Damp and moisture penetration
- Roof defects
- Structural cracks
- Poor or zero ventilation
- Timber decay
- Plumbing issues
- Electrical concerns
- Insulation deficiencies
- Signs of previous repairs or movement

For many buyers, the inspection provides valuable information that can sometimes help them to renegotiate the price, budget for future repairs or, in some cases deciding to pull out of the purchase and look for a better property. If they do that, I know I have done my job correctly as I will have possibly saved them thousands in repair works that they did not realise were wrong with the house

Why Professional Inspections Matter

Many defects are simply not visible to the untrained eye.

Fresh paint can disguise cracking. Furniture can hide moisture damage. Recently completed decorating can mask poor workmanship.

A professional inspector knows where problems commonly occur and what warning signs to look for. More importantly, they understand building standards, construction methods and how small minor defects can indicate larger underlying issues.

A detailed inspection is not about creating unnecessary concern; it is about replacing uncertainty with informed decision-making.

New Doesn't Always Mean Perfect

One of the biggest misconceptions in the property market is that newly built homes don't require inspection.

In reality, some new homes contain hundreds of defects. Most are relatively minor, but collectively they can represent significant inconvenience and expense if they are not identified while the builder remains responsible for putting them right.

A professional snag inspection provides an independent assessment, ensuring the property has been completed to the standard the homeowner is entitled to expect.

An Independent Opinion

Property purchases often involve estate agents, developers, solicitors and mortgage providers, each playing an important role in the buying process.

A professional inspector has only one objective—to provide an honest, impartial assessment of the property's condition. That independence allows buyers to make informed decisions based on evidence rather than emotion.

Peace of Mind is Difficult to Put a Price On

For most people, purchasing a home is an emotional experience. It's exciting, but it can also be stressful.

A professional inspection doesn't remove every risk, but it significantly reduces the likelihood of any unpleasant surprises after moving in.

Knowing the true condition of a property allows buyers to proceed with greater confidence, negotiate where appropriate and plan realistically for future maintenance.

Choosing the Right Inspector

Not all inspection services are the same.

When choosing an inspector, buyers should look for someone with practical construction knowledge, experience across different property types and a reputation for producing detailed, easy-to-understand reports.

The inspection should be thorough, independent and focused on providing clear information rather than simply ticking boxes.

About Snaglist Steve

At Snaglist Steve, the aim has always been to help buyers make informed decisions and ensure homeowners receive the quality they deserve.

Every inspection is carried out with attention to detail, practical building knowledge and a commitment to producing comprehensive reports that clients can understand and is written in plain language. Whether inspecting a newly built home or assessing a property before purchase, the goal is the same—to identify issues early, provide honest advice and help clients avoid unnecessary expense in the future.

Buying a property is a massive investment and is an exciting time... you are finally getting a house that is yours, not one you are renting or living with others.. It Is Yours. It is a tough, long hard road buying a house, so let Snaglist Steve make the journey a little bit easier by providing you with a report that will be one less worry for you!

RETHINKING THE EVERYDAY CHORE OF DRYING CLOTHES

In Ireland, doing the laundry can sometimes feel like a battle with the weather. One minute the washing is hanging outside beneath a patch of blue sky; the next, rain sends everyone rushing for the clothes horse. For EcoDry, an Irish company based in Newport, Co. Tipperary, that familiar frustration became the starting point for a deceptively simple idea: make outdoor clothes drying practical all year round.

The story of EcoDry began at home. The company says the concept emerged from a conversation about the difficulties of drying clothes using a conventional washing line. Tumble dryers, radiators and indoor clothes horses had become part of the routine, while frequent tumble-drying could contribute to clothes shrinking and fading. The result was the development of the EcoDry Canopy Clothes Line — an outdoor drying system designed specifically for unpredictable Irish conditions.

At its heart, the concept is straightforward. Clothes hang outside as they would on a traditional line, but a canopy provides protection from rain. That means households can air-dry laundry without having to constantly check the forecast or dash outdoors when the clouds gather.

The appeal is about more than convenience. Air-drying can reduce reliance on energy-hungry tumble dryers, while keeping wet laundry outdoors can also help households avoid filling their homes with drying clothes. EcoDry positions its system as a practical investment that can save space, reduce energy use and be kinder to clothes and the environment.

The idea has also attracted attention beyond the company's own marketing. In 2024, The Sun Ireland featured an Irish social-media creator who described having an EcoDry installed as a "game changer", highlighting the freedom it offered from constantly monitoring the weather.

Customer feedback suggests that installation and service are an important part of the company's proposition. Recent reviewers have praised the team's communication, tidy installations and willingness to tailor the setup to individual homes. As of July 2026, EcoDry's Trustpilot profile showed a 4.8 rating from more than 70 reviews, although, as with all review platforms, customer experiences represent individual opinions rather than independently verified product testing.

There is something appealingly Irish about EcoDry's proposition. Rather than trying to defeat the weather, it works around it. The humble clothesline has been given a modern upgrade — one that turns an everyday household frustration into an opportunity to save energy, reclaim indoor space and make laundry a little less weather-dependent.

For a country where rain is never far from the forecast, that may be a small innovation with a surprisingly big impact.

VK Royal Heat Ltd: Building Better Homes, One Bespoke Design at a Time

In today's construction and home improvement market, homeowners are looking for more than quality products—they want craftsmanship, individuality and a company they can trust. In Waterford, VK Royal Heat Ltd, trading as Royal Home, has built its reputation by delivering exactly that. Founded in 2018 by entrepreneur Vytautas Kuras, the company has evolved from a specialist supplier of building materials into one of Ireland's recognised names for bespoke steel doors, premium windows, aluminium systems and contemporary architectural solutions.

From its base in Tramore, County Waterford, Royal Home serves customers throughout Ireland, combining European manufacturing excellence with a highly personalised customer experience. While many businesses focus solely on supplying products, Royal Home places equal emphasis on helping clients bring their vision to life. Every project begins with listening—understanding how people want to live, work and enjoy their homes before recommending the ideal solution.

Owner Vytautas Kuras established the business with a simple philosophy: never compromise on quality. Starting as an importer of premium building products, the company quickly recognised growing demand for distinctive, made-to-measure architectural features. Within a few years, Royal Home expanded into bespoke steel-and-glass doors and partitions, offering homeowners and interior designers the opportunity to create striking living spaces that combine elegance with functionality. In 2022, the company introduced its own range of exclusive designs, further strengthening its position as an innovator within the Irish home improvement sector.

Today, Royal Home's portfolio extends well beyond steel doors. Customers can choose from high-performance PVC, aluminium and timber windows and doors, garage doors, internal partitions and custom architectural glazing, all selected to enhance both the appearance and energy efficiency of modern homes. Whether supplying a contemporary self-build, a period renovation or a commercial project, the company prides itself on precision engineering, premium materials and meticulous attention to detail.

One of Royal Home's greatest strengths is its commitment to customer service. Every bespoke order is supported with detailed technical drawings, ongoing communication and expert guidance from design through to delivery. This hands-on approach has earned the business enthusiastic recommendations from homeowners across Ireland, many of whom praise not only the quality of the finished products but also the professionalism and responsiveness of Vytautas Kuras and his team throughout the entire process.

As architectural trends continue to favour open-plan living, natural light and industrial-inspired interiors, Royal Home has become synonymous with elegant Crittall-style doors and statement glazing that transform ordinary spaces into extraordinary homes. These bespoke features have become signature pieces in kitchens, living rooms and home offices, adding both value and visual impact.

Despite its national reach, the company remains proudly rooted in Waterford. Operating as an Irish-owned independent business, Royal Home continues to support homeowners, builders, architects and interior designers with the same personalised service that has defined the company since its foundation. This local commitment, combined with a European outlook on design and innovation, has enabled VK Royal Heat Ltd to compete successfully in a demanding marketplace.

Looking ahead, Royal Home shows no signs of slowing down. By continually investing in design, expanding its bespoke product range and maintaining uncompromising standards of quality, the company continues to redefine what is possible in modern home design. For customers seeking craftsmanship, innovation and service they can rely on, VK Royal Heat Ltd—trading as Royal Home—is proving that exceptional homes begin with exceptional details.

EVERSTRONG BUILDERS LTD.

IRELAND'S COMPLETE BUILDING AND MAINTENANCE PARTNER

In a construction industry where reliability, quality and efficiency matter more than ever, Leinster-based Everstrong Builders is positioning itself as a versatile partner for both residential and commercial clients. Based in both Dublin and Kildare, the family-owned company brings a broad range of building and maintenance services together under one roof, aiming to make projects simpler for customers from start to finish.

Everstrong Builders' approach is built around providing multiple trades through a single contractor. Its services include construction and fit-outs, electrical work, plumbing, carpentry, renovations, painting, flooring and flat roofing.

For homeowners, that can mean avoiding the challenge of coordinating several different contractors during a renovation or new-build project. For commercial customers, the company offers a similarly integrated service covering offices, retail premises, hospitality, industrial facilities and other buildings.

Snagging and finishing works are also an important part of Everstrong's service offering. The company can assist homeowners, landlords and commercial clients with snag lists, identifying and addressing outstanding defects, incomplete works and finishing details before a project is considered fully complete. From minor repairs and adjustments to more extensive remedial works, the aim is to provide customers with a single point of contact to get projects finished properly and to a high standard. One area in which Everstrong has developed a particular focus is energy efficiency. The company specialises in commercial LED lighting upgrades, offering businesses an opportunity to modernise outdated lighting while reducing energy consumption and maintenance requirements.

Everstrong says its LED retrofit projects can typically reduce lighting energy costs by 40–65%, with each installation beginning with an energy assessment to establish potential savings and payback.

The company's construction services reflect the same emphasis on coordinated project delivery. Everstrong says its fit-out team can manage projects from initial planning through to handover, coordinating trades, materials and resources along the way. Its stated priorities include a customer-focused approach, communication, safety, quality control and compliance with Irish building standards.

Roofing is another important part of the business. Everstrong provides flat-roof installation, refurbishment, repairs and maintenance, working with systems including PVC, EPDM, TPO and bituminous membranes. The company emphasises careful site assessment, drainage, insulation and long-term performance when specifying roofing solutions.

What ultimately distinguishes Everstrong Builders is its attempt to combine traditional construction skills with modern priorities such as energy efficiency, sustainability and streamlined project management. Whether upgrading a commercial property, fitting out a new space or transforming a home, the Dublin company's message is straightforward: bring the trades together, communicate clearly and build with the long term in mind.

For a growing business in Ireland's construction sector, that combination of practical expertise and integrated services could prove a strong foundation for the future.

Transforming Kitchens Without the Cost of Replacement

The kitchen has long been regarded as the heart of the home, but over time even the most well-loved spaces can begin to look tired. While many homeowners dream of a brand-new kitchen, the cost, disruption, and waste associated with a full renovation can make the idea seem out of reach. Fortunately, there is an increasingly popular alternative that delivers impressive results without the expense of replacing existing units. Dublin Kitchen Respray has built a strong reputation by helping homeowners achieve stunning kitchen transformations through professional respraying services.

Rather than removing perfectly functional cabinets and fittings, Dublin Kitchen Respray restores and revitalises them using specialist preparation techniques and high-quality spray finishes. The result is a factory-quality appearance that can completely change the look and feel of a kitchen in a fraction of the time required for a traditional refurbishment.

The company offers an extensive selection of colours and finishes, allowing customers to create anything from a timeless classic kitchen to a sleek, contemporary design. Whether the goal is to brighten a room with crisp white cabinetry, introduce sophisticated grey tones, or make a bold statement with rich navy or forest green, every project is tailored to suit the homeowner's vision and style.

Quality craftsmanship sits at the centre of Dublin Kitchen Respray's approach. Every project begins with careful preparation, ensuring surfaces are thoroughly cleaned, repaired where necessary, and primed before specialist coatings are applied. This attention to detail helps produce a smooth, durable finish that is designed to withstand the demands of everyday family life while maintaining its appearance for years to come.

Another significant advantage of kitchen respraying is its environmental impact. Instead of disposing of existing cabinets and contributing to landfill waste, homeowners can extend the lifespan of their current kitchen by giving it a completely new appearance. This sustainable approach appeals to those looking to reduce waste while making environmentally conscious home improvement decisions.

Customer service is equally important to the company's success. From the initial consultation through to the completed project, clients receive clear communication, professional advice, and a commitment to delivering high standards of workmanship. Every kitchen is treated as a unique project, with careful attention paid to the customer's preferences, timescales, and budget.

As more homeowners seek cost-effective and sustainable ways to modernise their homes, kitchen respraying continues to grow in popularity across Dublin and beyond. Dublin Kitchen Respray demonstrates how expert craftsmanship, innovative techniques, and outstanding customer care can breathe new life into existing kitchens without the inconvenience of a complete renovation.

For homeowners looking to refresh one of the most important rooms in the house, Dublin Kitchen Respray offers a practical, stylish, and environmentally responsible solution that proves a remarkable transformation doesn't always require starting from scratch.

PREMIUM FLOORING SOLUTIONS FOR YOUR HOME

When it comes to transforming a home, flooring can make one of the biggest differences to the overall look, feel and functionality of a space. Diamond Flooring Dublin is a Dublin-based flooring specialist focused on providing high-quality flooring solutions with professional installation and attention to detail. The company offers a range of flooring options designed to suit different interior styles, practical requirements and budgets.

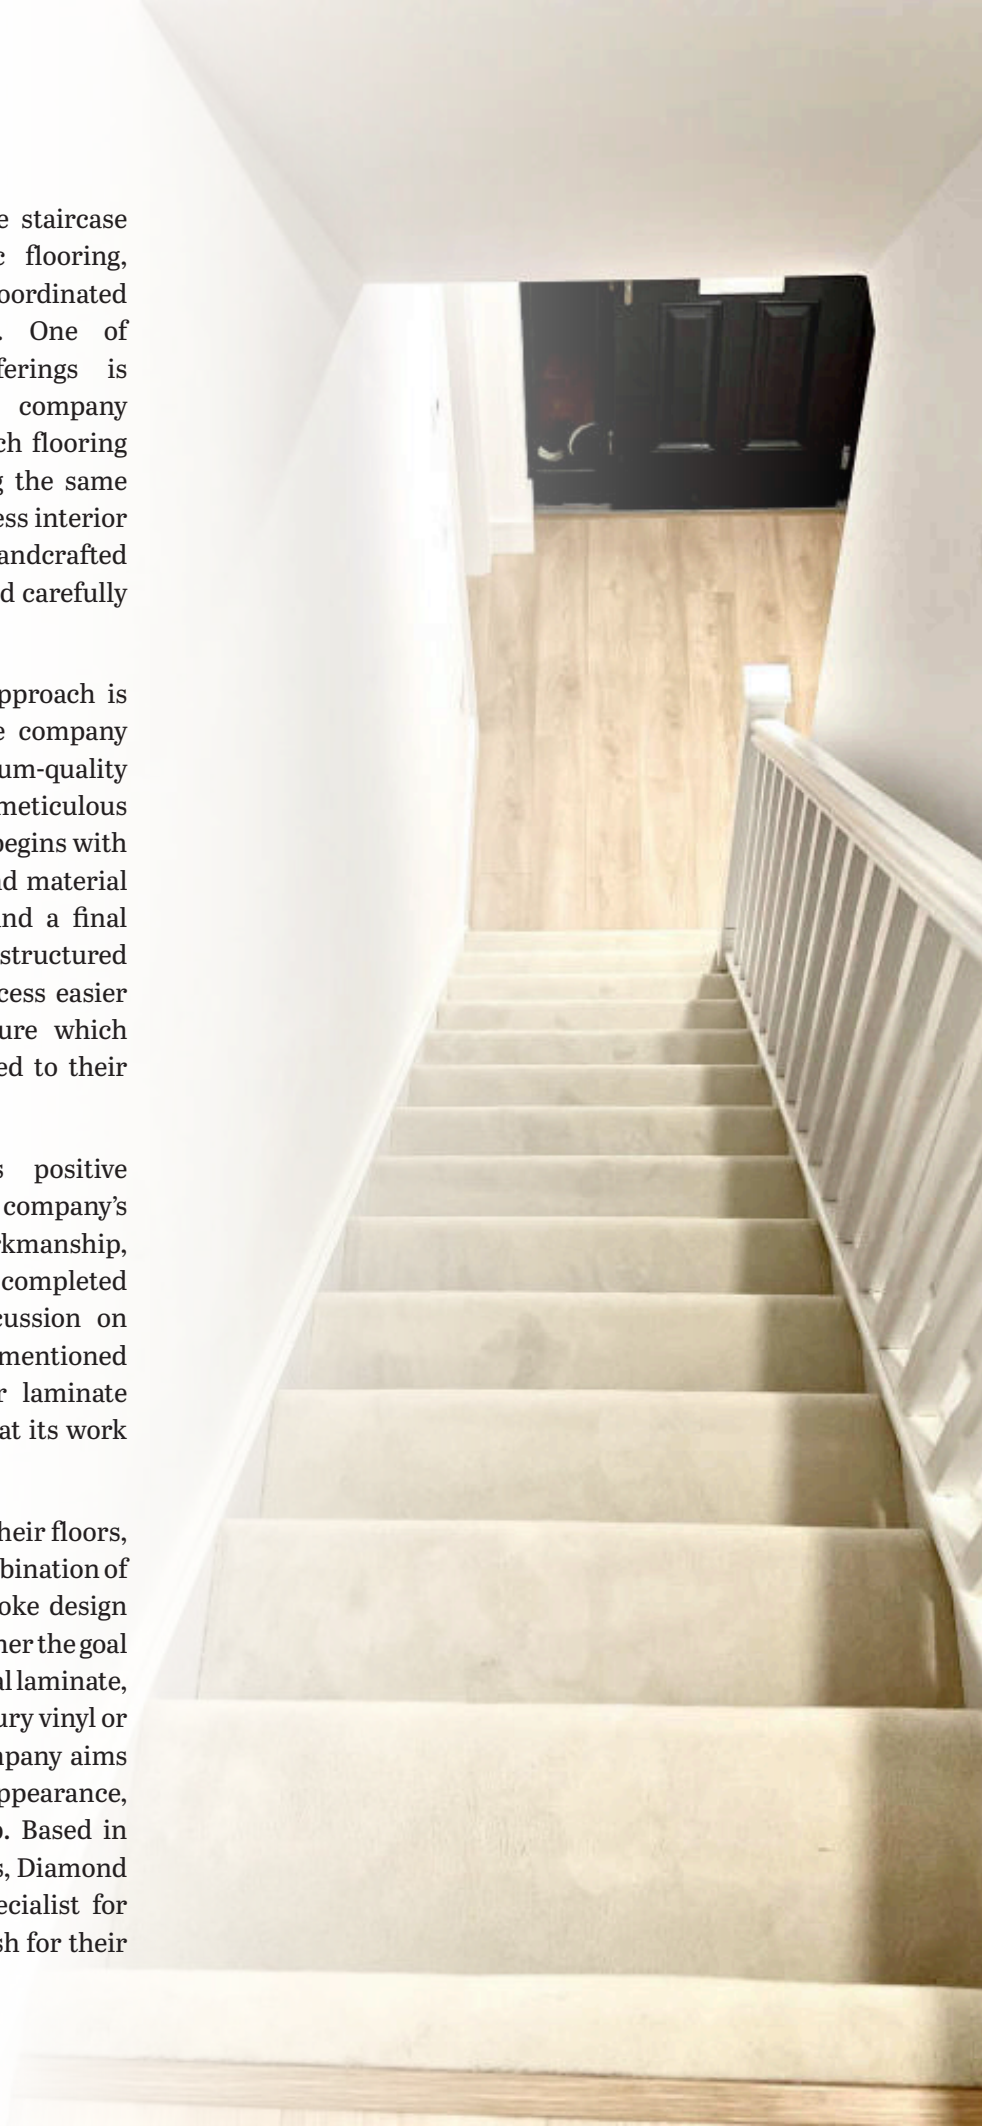

Diamond Flooring provides several popular flooring choices, including herringbone, laminate, engineered wood and luxury vinyl flooring. Herringbone flooring is particularly suited to homeowners looking to create a sophisticated and timeless appearance, while laminate offers a practical and cost-effective option for busy households. Engineered flooring provides the natural character and warmth of real wood while offering enhanced stability, making it an attractive choice for modern Dublin homes. Luxury vinyl flooring is another versatile option, particularly for areas where durability, water resistance and easy maintenance are important.

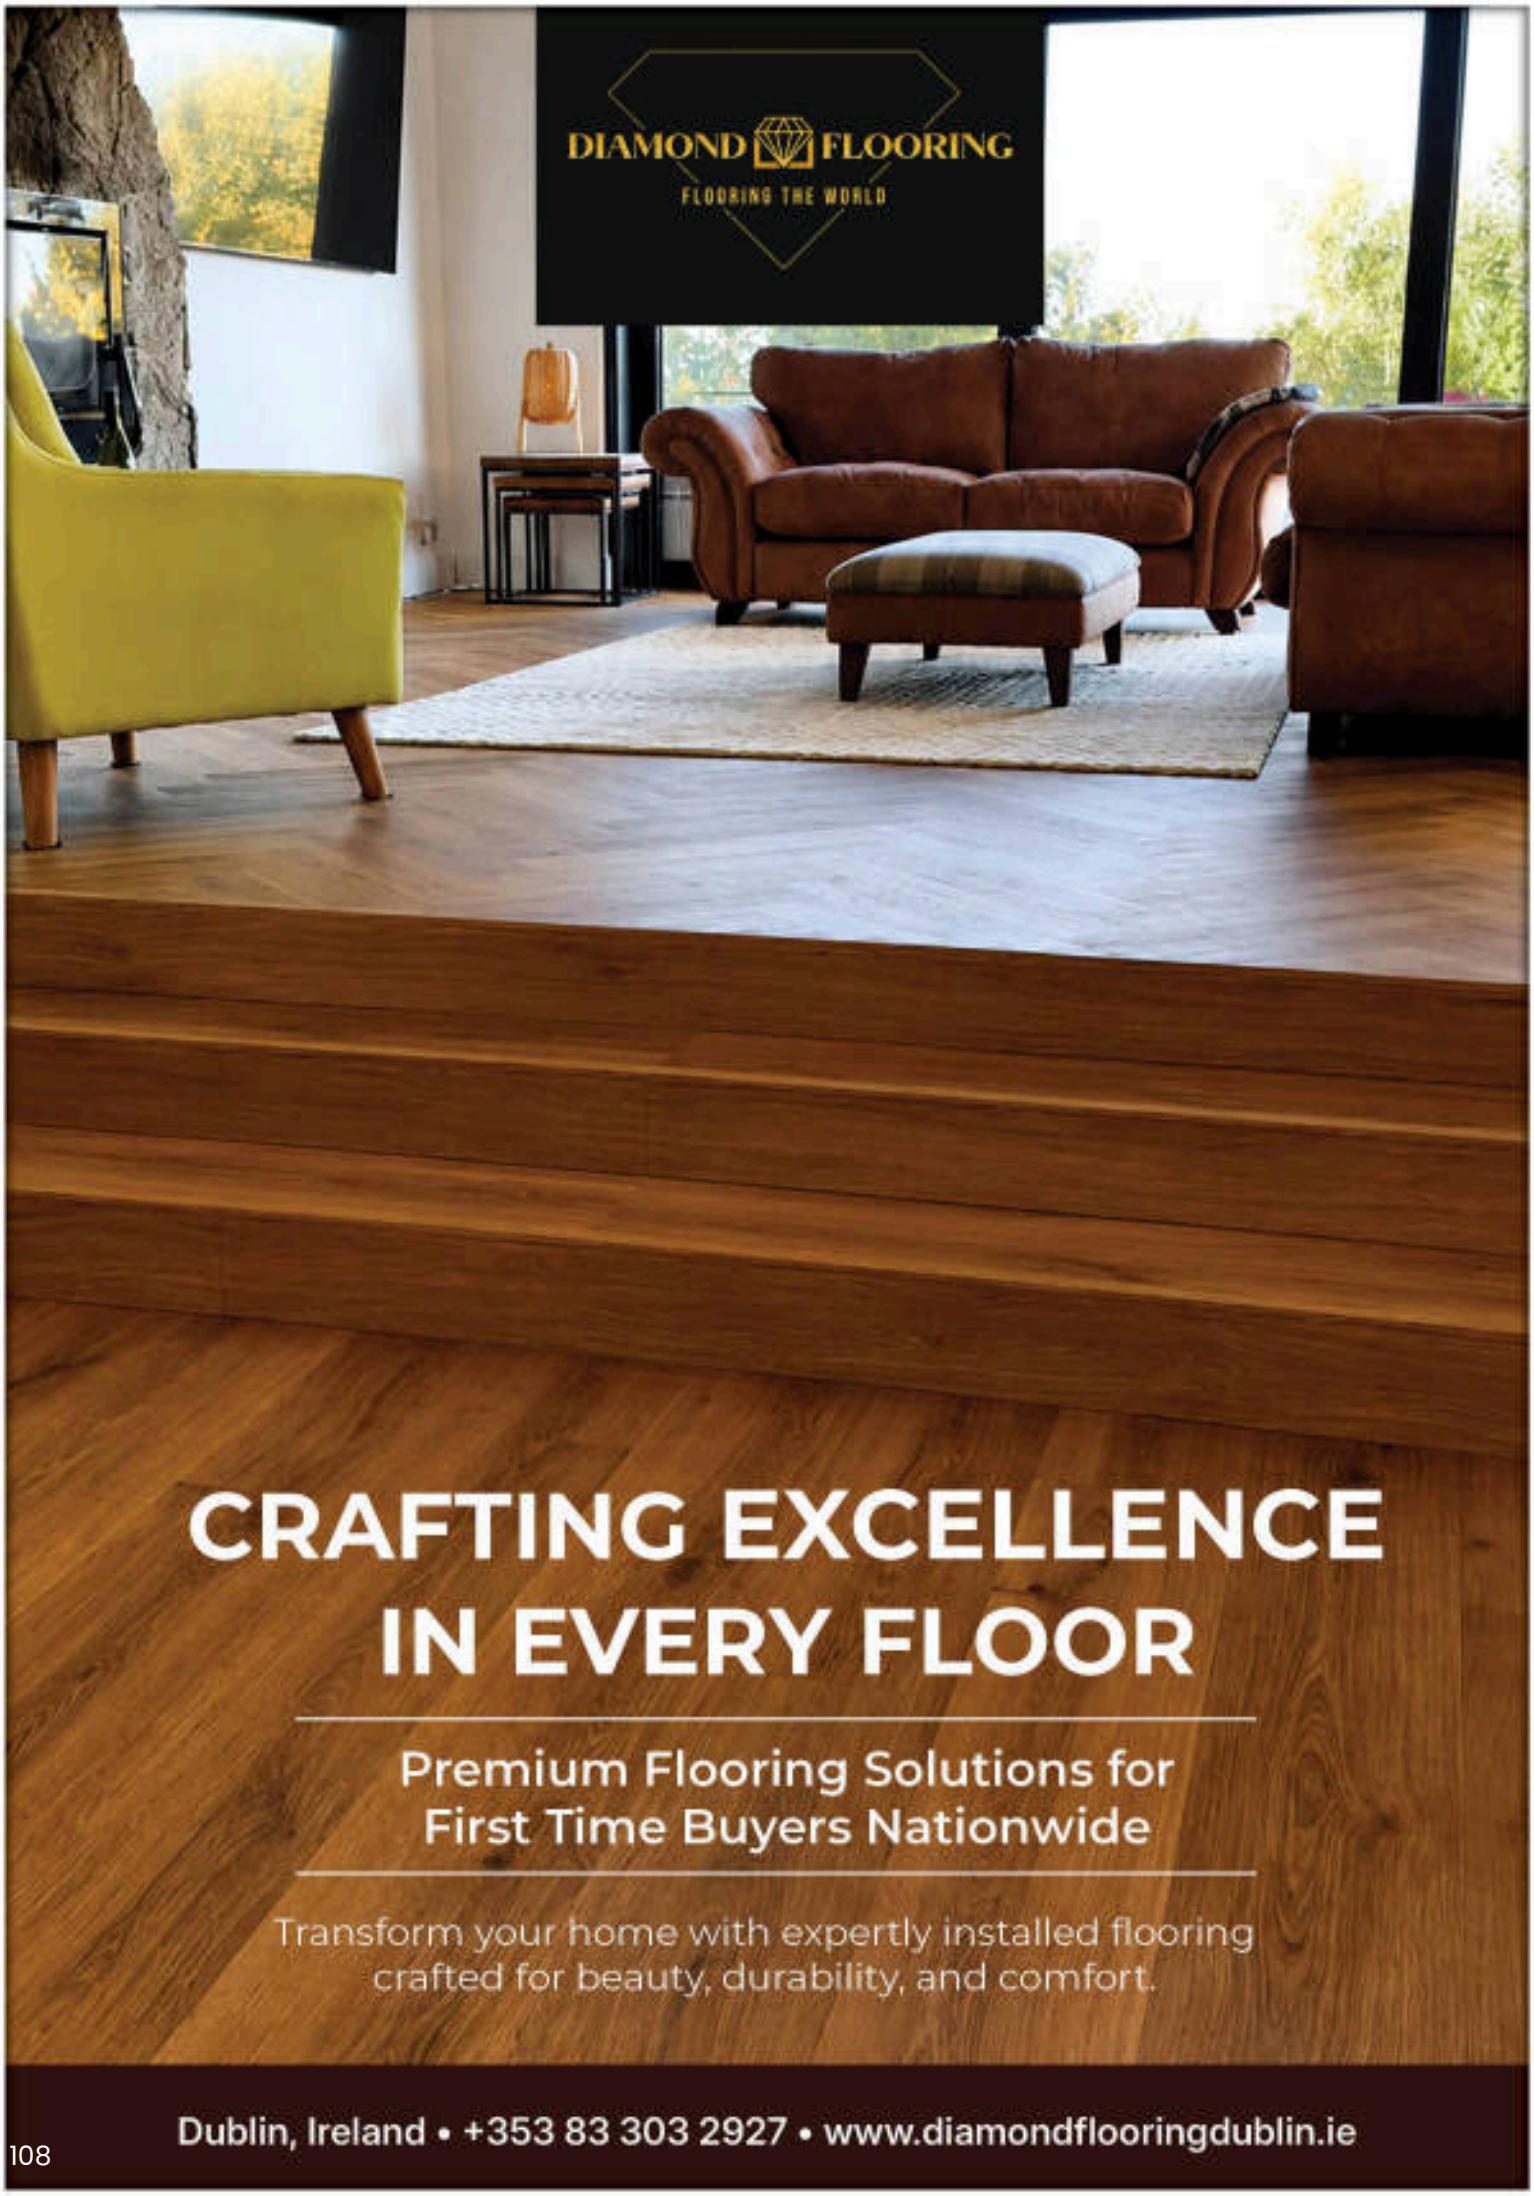

The company also provides laminate staircase solutions, wall panelling and attic flooring, allowing customers to create a more coordinated finish throughout their property. One of Diamond Flooring's standout offerings is its bespoke staircase service. The company describes a unified approach in which flooring and staircases can be finished using the same colour and material, creating a seamless interior design. Its staircase work includes handcrafted detailing, precision 45-degree cuts and carefully aligned joints for a refined finish.

A key part of Diamond Flooring's approach is its emphasis on craftsmanship. The company highlights the importance of premium-quality materials, experienced installers and meticulous attention to detail. Its stated process begins with a consultation, followed by design and material selection, professional installation and a final inspection before handover. This structured approach can make the flooring process easier for homeowners who may be unsure which material, colour or style is best suited to their property.

Customer feedback also reflects positive experiences, with testimonials on the company's website praising the quality of workmanship, professionalism and cleanliness of completed projects. In addition, a recent discussion on Reddit's Irish housing community mentioned Diamond Flooring as an option for laminate work, with one commenter noting that its work appeared neat and professional.

For homeowners looking to upgrade their floors, Diamond Flooring Dublin offers a combination of contemporary flooring choices, bespoke design options and professional fitting. Whether the goal is a classic herringbone finish, practical laminate, elegant engineered wood, durable luxury vinyl or a fully coordinated staircase, the company aims to deliver flooring that combines appearance, durability and quality craftsmanship. WHERE CRAFTSMANSHIP MEETS MODERN LIVING

In a world where homeowners are increasingly looking to make better use of every corner of their property, good carpentry has become about much more than simply building something from timber. It is about creating practical, beautiful spaces that feel as though they were always meant to be there. For Dublin homeowners, ABM Carpentry is taking this approach across a diverse range of indoor and outdoor projects.

Based in Dublin and working throughout Leinster, ABM Carpentry specialises in bespoke carpentry, garden rooms, decking, fitted furniture, outdoor woodwork and renovation projects. From a carefully designed fitted wardrobe to a fully insulated garden room, the company's work is centred around creating solutions that are tailored to each individual property and client.

One of the most appealing aspects of modern carpentry is its ability to transform unused space. ABM's garden rooms, for example, can provide homeowners with a versatile additional area away from the main house. Whether imagined as a home office, studio, creative space or private retreat, a well-designed garden room can add an entirely new dimension to a garden while providing valuable usable space.

Tel: 0894585501 • Email: cip_dorin_ignat@yahoo.com

Outdoor living is another area where skilled carpentry can make a significant difference. ABM Carpentry undertakes decking, fencing, gates, pergolas, cladding and other garden structures, helping homeowners create outdoor environments that are both functional and visually appealing. A thoughtfully constructed deck can become an extension of the living space, while a pergola or bespoke garden structure can introduce definition and character to an otherwise underused area. Inside the home, the emphasis is equally strong on individuality. Custom furniture, wardrobes, alcove units, media units, doors, flooring, skirting and architrave are among the services offered. Rather than relying solely on off-the-shelf solutions, ABM focuses on work measured and built specifically for the space, allowing homeowners to achieve a more cohesive and personalised result.

Perhaps what stands out most is the company's emphasis on the details behind the finished product. ABM describes its approach as one where the same team can take a project from initial measurement through to final installation, with an emphasis on tidy working practices, clear communication and quality finishes. The company also offers written quotes and states that its work is fully insured and guaranteed.

For homeowners considering a renovation, garden transformation or bespoke carpentry project, choosing the right craftsperson can be as important as choosing the design itself. ABM Carpentry brings together traditional woodworking skills with a contemporary understanding of how Dublin homes are being used today.

From beautifully fitted interiors to practical garden rooms and outdoor structures, ABM Carpentry demonstrates how thoughtful craftsmanship can turn an idea — and a piece of timber — into something genuinely useful, distinctive and built to last.
